

Successfully Defended a Workers' Compensation Claim Involving a Traumatic Head Injury

Luke Behnke was the lead attorney for a large installer of commercial fire protection systems and an insurance carrier in the successful defense of a Wisconsin claim for workers' compensation involving a Medicare beneficiary with a significant traumatic head injury. After proofs were closed, the case settled for a fraction of the employer's realistic trial exposure following cross-examination of the former employee and employee's vocational expert witness, which testimony called into question whether permanent disability existed to such an extent that the employee was unemployable. Luke has served as lead attorney for various companies defending against workers' compensation claims, and he has the experience necessary to handle these matters for his clients when they arise.
