Former president of the Chinese American Bar Association, Gary Zhao, was featured in a Chicago Daily Law Bulletin article about the organization's recent record growth. Under Gary's presidency he took steps to initiate growth including networking and professional development which in turn, would attract and retain members.

Gary said of the organizations growth, "If we develop good lawyers that would become good judges, that would become leaders in their own law firm, that are able to grow their own practice, I think they will in turn contribute that time, human resources and maybe financial resources from their own successful law practice back into the Chinese American Bar Association." Gary served as president of the organization from 2012 to 2015.
