Michael Cortina is featured in the recent Chicago Lawyer article, "Banking and finance lawyers guess at the future amid Trump's changeable deregulation policies," which discusses the feelings of uncertainty many businesses, from small community banks to large global banks are experiencing.

Mike provides his insight on the topic stating, "The only real advice we can give our clients is what the current state of the law is and that they should adhere to the current law unless the current laws change, which may or may not happen. Being agile and able to adapt is important since change may be around the corner, but adhering to the existing laws and regulations is simply a requirement."
